I moved the singers a little to add body to the lines with text. There is an alternative accompaniment of string quartet or string assemblies, but wanted what felt would be a more light, more transparent piano sound. An excellent winter characteristic or festival election for mature choirs. While you listen to this part of the song, an image is created in your head. Words and music are merged in a moving way and a leisure of transmitting the intense beauty of the landscape. The text at this song is absolutely perfect, since it was taken from a poem. The highs at this song were flat very often at this song, and to fix that, wave Gjello Å, preview article #: ww1459a, State: Available Description: Scenes from Norway Native composer: Specifically the Mountain plateau Hardangervidda, inspired this poem by Charles Anthony Silvestri. Full punctuation and string quartet pieces. This is a swept, almost atmosphere work in a poem by Charles A, while listening to this, an unimaginable place is created in your mind. Included in this song is a role of extremely high solitary soprano, which, when the proper person is chosen, can do the song in a masterpiece. I also had three voices in the soprano lines only by the same reason, although I think a soloist could also talk over the choir in this tessite. This song is accompanied by a piano and is specifically made for the women's choir. This song is a short and sweet piece that shows the beauty of Norway. The melody includes many high notes. While you listen to the text, you can listen to what beauty is talking about. For example, in the song they chose the perfect soprano. The area is quite stylum, and intensely beautiful.
